Discussion Forum Posts

Messages in the discussions area are called “Posts”.

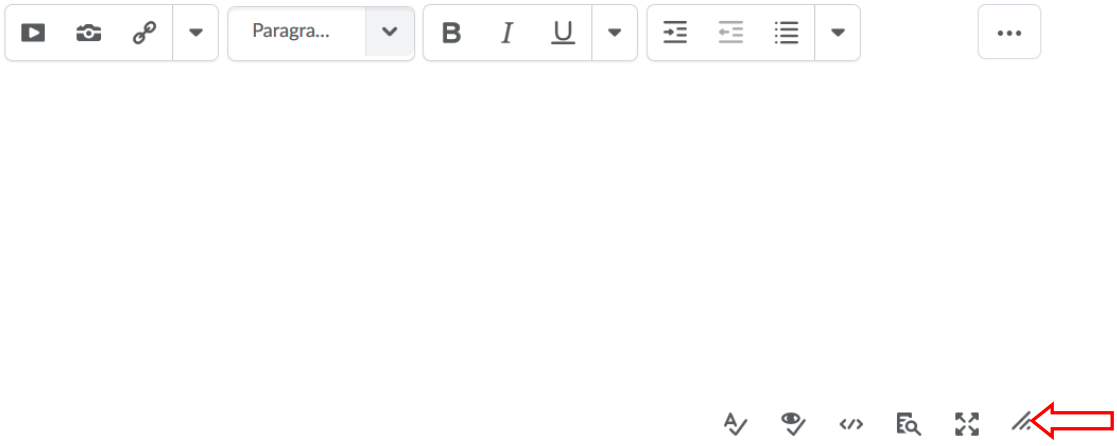

Within the Discussion area:

- Each Forum is listed in black bold type, and each topic is listed in blue bold type.
- For Discussion Question topics, you should start a New Thread with your answer to the discussion question.
- For Student Comments and Questions, you can reply to another student, or start a new thread.

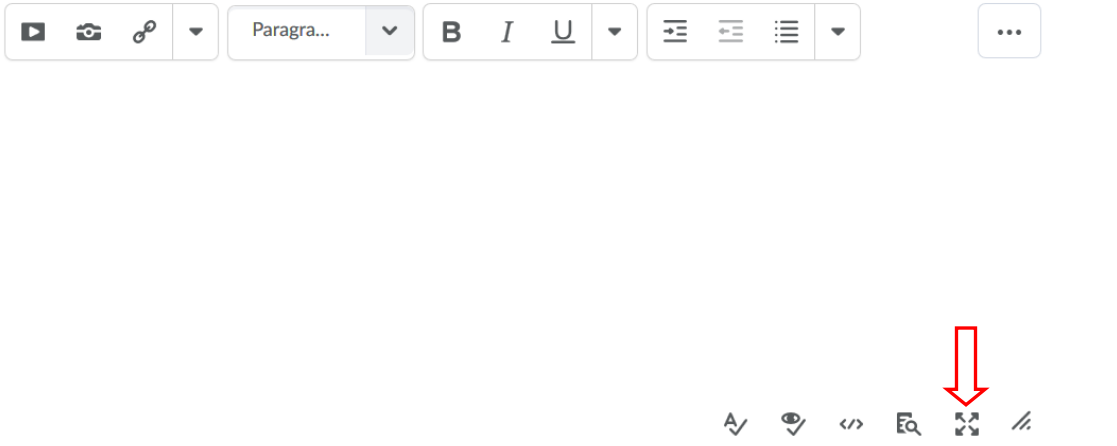

Hints

1) The HTML editor box that you type into is fairly small, and can be frustrating to edit. But it can be extended easily.

a) To make it just a little bigger, click and drag the expand icon in the lower right corner:

b) Or to enlarge the box to take up the full window, click the “Full Screen mode” icon :

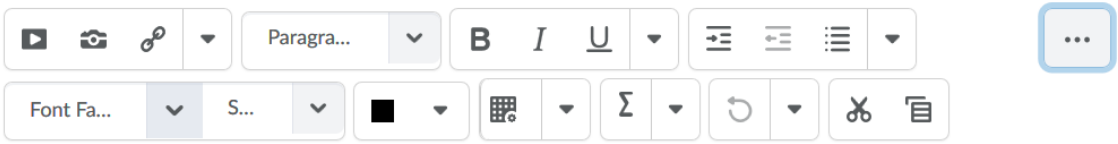

2) Posting program source code:

Source code displays best in a fixed width font. So when you enter program code, it displays better if you choose Courier font.

To get to this option, you must first click on the … button to show all the edition options.

All options will now show:

10 pt, Courier font works best for posting code:

After choosing 10 pt Courier font, anything you type will appear like this:

int num = 0;

Pressing SHIFT-ENTER, instead of just ENTER, to go to a new line, will prevent the editor from double spacing your code.

3) Cutting/copying and pasting

If you cut or copy from somewhere outside the editor, you can use CTRL-V to past into the editor.

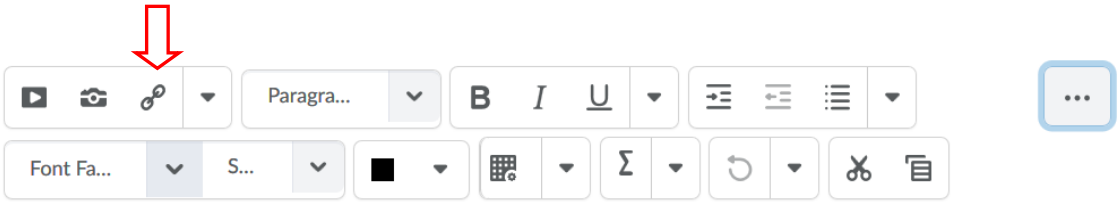

4) To insure that your message is formatted the way you want it to be, click on the "Preview" icon before posting.

Example:

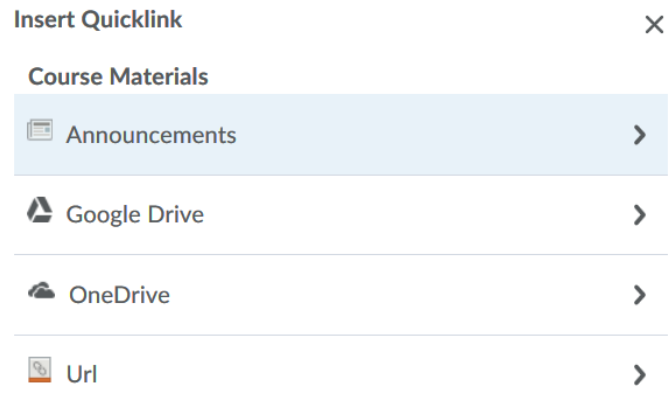

5) Inserting active hyperlinks

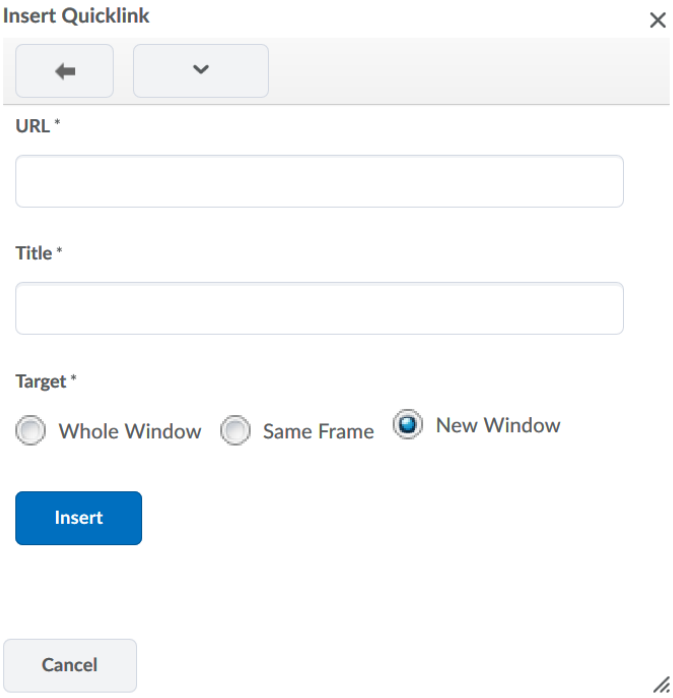

You can insert an active hyperlink into your message, using the QuickLink icon . You should always do this, when referencing a web page in your post.

Clicking the icon will open an "Insert a Quick Link" window.

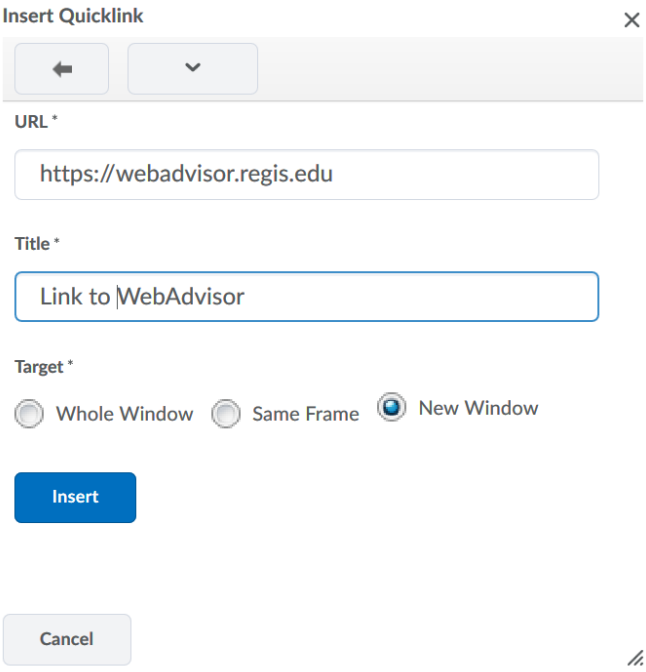

Click on URL to open the Quicklink box for URLs.

Type in the web address into the URL box.
Type a Title for displaying the link (this can be the web address again).
It is also a good idea to choose to open the link in a New Window.

Example:

Then click the Insert button to add the link to your message.
The link will now appear in your message content as an active link:
